

Computer teacher

A teacher in Ghana, West Africa, is making headlines around the world after a photo of him in class went viral. Owura Kwadwo Hottish, 33, is an information and communications technology teacher in a middle school. Where he works there are no computers, so instead he methodically draws the computer screen in detail on the blackboard. Hottish posted photos of himself in the middle of February showing him teaching his students how to use Microsoft Word. The photos spread like wildfire. The teacher spends around 30 minutes making the drawings before each class. To him, it's nothing special. "Every subject is taught on the blackboard here," he said. "Teaching of ICT in Ghana's school is very funny," Hottish wrote, alongside his photos. "I love my students so I have to do what will make them understand what I am teaching."
