"Who that benefits is of no interest to me" (Robert Jenrick says he regrets dining with donor before planning decision, 22 July). It is deeply depressing, though not in the least surprising, that a Conservative housing minister would see a decision whether money should go to a millionaire developer and Tory donor, or to one of the most deprived communities in the country, as 39. It speaks volumes of the ethos of the modern Conservative party and why they are unfit to govern.
